Experience and memory are fleeting ephemera. Each piece on this album draws on material that I have created during different seasons of my life, inspired by the people, places, and things that have graced and impressed themselves deeply upon me. I weave these materials together into a narrative that explores the fleetingness that colours what happens in our lives and how we remember them — hence the title, Ephemory, which is a portmanteau of these words: ephemerality and memory.

Many of these pieces take existing repertoire as starting points, before wandering off into their own fantasies. I am very much influenced by the harmonic language of French Impressionism and jazz, as well as the zen aesthetic of Japanese anime. This collection bears witness to my evolution as a classical pianist, and also offers a glimpse of what is to come.

^{*} From Mm. 72-79, the RH arpeggios are just a general guideline and not meant to be followed strictly. The performer should follow the outline of these arpeggios and play as many as they deem musically coherent.

^{*} Pianists may choose to alter indiviual notes for ease of performance. Everybody's hands are different and what works for mine might not work for others.

^{} Tremolos are to be placed slightly after the melody. See written-out tremolos on the first page for reference. Trills are to be played with a similar tremolo effect.
